in Twenty-three Years.

The great progress in electrical science has all taken place since 1871. Before that time, says Hardware, there seemed to be little more of it than the telegraph and a few philosophical instruments in use in schools. Now one is amazed at what has been accomplished. Inventors contrived the duplex, the quadruplex, the sextuplex and the automatic instruments in quick succession: then with a stride came the telephones and arc and in-andescent lights, then the motor, and last of all the troiley car.

We omit the one hundred and one little things in domestic economy utilizing electricity, and say nothing of cooking or heating. The troiley car in itself is revolutionizing suburban existence, and will do much to relieve the crowded condition of our cities. These cars move so quickly and with such frequent intervals that they are simply revolutionizing transportation for short distances. It is well to say that one great impetus to this progress in the past year or so has been the great fall in the price of copper.

It was learned from another source that the young man, who is twenty-six years old, came to New York three years ago and was employed in the firm's he took a trip through the South with shipping department. A few weeks ago he took a trip through the South with his stepmother, returning to Detroit on Paim Sunday.

He remained there for a few days, and then came to this city. He wrote home that he was glad to get back to New York, and the tone of the letter was such as to give no hint of any trouble. On Thurslay afternoon Parke left the store at the usual time, apparently in good spirits. Friday morning he failed to come to business, but owing to his connection with the head of the firm no inquiry was made concerning his absence. Friday and Saturday passed, and still he did not appear at the store. Hecoming worried, Mr. Clay, the manager, made a search among the young man's papers at the office. In the safe was found his purse and a note which read. Good-by forever. Thoroughly alarmed, Mr. Clay communicated with Police Headquarters and took other means to discover Parke's whererbouts. All efforts, however, to find the missing man were fruitless, and yesterday it was decided to communicate with his parents and friends in Detroit. Numerous telegrams went back and forth between this city and Detroit, but no light was shed on the matter.

Mr. Clay admitted to-day that he had not the slightest clue which might help to locate the missing man. It was learned that Parke has been recently paying attention to a young woman in this city whose address is kept a secret by Mr. Clay. The fact that he was not inclined to be dissipated makes his disappearance all the more mysterious.

DR. MEYER'S JURY.

Only Three Men Secured Up to Noon To-Day. Court Officer Pete Seaman shouted: "Hats off!" in Part II., of the ourt of General Sesions, this morning ninety citizens of yesterday's special obeyed the order. When Clerk ninety arose en masse and moved upon the pale-faced jurist. As they advanced, the pale face settled into an expression of forbiddance that made the hearts of the jurymen quake, and one by one he sent them back to their seats.

One of the Queer Salaried Positions in the House of Commons.

Reverting to the duties of a whip and patronage secretary, it is an astonishing fact that gentlemen of birth and social position can be found to fill the post. bler and made a great fuss, says the Boston Courier.

As we were waiting at the coat-room he again drew from his pocket the sheet of violet note-paper, and I saw him smile feverishly as he perused it.

Later on, in the street, I saw him close under an electric light, where his eyes furtively jumped from the sheet of violet-colored note-paper in his hand to the electrics that lumbered by. The same feverish smile was on his countenance.

A certain car passed and he entered it. And as he comfortably seated himself in a corner he once more drew the violet-hued note from his pocket and read with the same child-like interest, and the smile on his face was still feverish. dict was to the effect: "We find that Isabe. Shields came to her death from a gunsbes wound, the gun being in the hands of a person supposed to be Peter Duane."

Every one believed the gun was discharged accidentally, and it surprised many when the elder Duane told his son to say nothing. Young Duane says he did not know it was loaded and carried it downstains carelessly across his arm. As he approached the parlor door he stumbled and the gun was discharged. ELECTRICAL SCIENCE.
